Good practices in protected area management, biodiversity conservation and the promotion of nature, culture and people

- Good practices that maintain/improve the level of environmental conservation and protection (ensure a favorable conservation status for habitats and species):
- delineation of the protected natural areas boundaries,
- appropriate zoning of protected natural areas,
- development of systematic monitoring activities of species and habitats in protected natural areas,
- control of populations of species considered invasive,
- promotion of repopulation activities for species with reduced populations,
- carrying out ecological reconstruction activities of species habitats,
- arrangement of support infrastructures for wild flora and fauna species (for example, feeding infrastructures, shelters, nests, etc.).

- * Good practices for enhancing the value of nature and culture through tourism and recreation in protected natural areas (oriented primarily towards the development of new economic opportunities for local communities and maintaining the sustainability of these activities):
- organizing and diversifying tourist activities in parallel with the conservation of geo-diversity and biodiversity (e.g., thematic trails, water sports, climbing, cycling);
- developing visitor infrastructure (e.g., information-documentation centers, signage, rest areas, picnic areas, campsites, fireplaces, lookout points, observation points);
- linking tourist activities with traditional activities;
- developing support services for tourist activities (e.g., public catering facilities).
